

WHILE IN DETENTION YOU HAVE RIGHTS

TO COMMUNICATE: You have the right to contact parents or guardians and to have them visit you here.

TO HAVE PROPERTY: You have the right to your valuables and other possessions protected, stored, and returned to you upon release.

TO BE SAFE AND SECURE: Neither staff nor any residents have the right to strike you, inflict physical harm, or verbally abuse you. You may, however, be restrained if your actions are a threat to you or another's safety. Unwanted physical or sexual advances toward you are also a violation of your rights. If you are abused or violated by anyone during your stay, report it to staff immediately.

TO KNOW WHY YOU ARE DETAINED: You must be given a written statement of the charges against you before your hearing in court.

TO HAVE LEGAL COUNSEL: You have the right to talk to and be represented by an attorney. If you or your family cannot afford an attorney, the court must provide one for you and give you time to talk with him/her before your hearing.

TO REMAIN SILENT: You cannot be required to discuss your charges with anyone. Anything you say during intake and while you are in detention may be used against you in legal proceedings. You have the right not to testify against yourself and you cannot be required to present evidence against yourself at your hearing.

NOT TO BE HELD WITH ADULTS: In most cases, it is illegal for anyone under 18 to be detained in the same place with adult inmates. If youths and adults are held in the same facility, there must be complete separation between adult and juvenile detainees.

TO MEDICAL CARE: You have the right to medical attention. Report special health problems, or medication requests, to detention staff.

TO BE HEARD: You have the right to a detention hearing within 72 hours of your intake at detention or on the next business day if the 72 hours end on a weekend or holiday. The judge will decide if you will be detained for a longer period. If your case goes for trial before a judge, you have the right to present witnesses in your defense.
